Description

Raphael Minichiello speaks with his lawyers Giuseppe Sotgiu and Edmondo Zappacosta before an appeal for his retrial. Minichiello had fought in Vietnam for the US Marines, but committed a theft and was court-martialled but rather than face court he opted to hijack a plane bound for San Francisco and re route it to Rome, on 31st October, 1969. He let the passengers off in Denver and carried on, making stops and to refuel at Bangor, Maine, and Shannon, Ireland. He escaped authorities in Rome but was arrested when tracked down in an Italian countryside church. The Italian government refused to extradite Minichiello to the United States, deciding instead to try him in Rome—though only for relatively minor offences such as weapons possession. Minichiello was convicted of a single charge and ended up serving just 18 months in jail.
